

NEWS

TRAVEL WEEKLY

November 30, 2017

The Naples Grande Beach Resort, as seen from the Palm Terrace pool.

Two Florida beach resorts, one in Naples and the other in the Florida Keys, will reopen to guests on Dec. 15, after recovering from damage due to Hurricane Irma.

During its three-and-a-half month closure, the Naples Grande Beach Resort underwent a multimillion-dollar refresh from its lobby to the top of the 18th floor. Most public spaces including elevators, most restaurants and meetings rooms as well as the tower guestrooms have been refreshed, repainted and updated with the resort's coastal chic aesthetic. The pools and lush landscaping were also part of the project.

Rather than relying entirely on outside contractors, staff helped with painting, landscaping, and cleaning throughout all 23 acres.

"It's been a challenging few months, but we're excited and eager to come back stronger than ever," said director of sales and marketing Frank Cavella. "We're so thankful for the support of the Naples community, and specifically our hardworking staff, to get us back in the business of hospitality and memory making."

<http://www.travelweekly.com/North-America-Travel/Islamorada-and-Naples-resorts-reopen-post-Irma>